Read the passage and answer the questions that follow:

Based on molecular evidence, we know life evolved from one common ancestor around three billion years ago. From then, evolution progressed, slowly to begin with - in the last billion years, we see very rapid diversification of life forms on Earth as multiple components clicked into place, including multicellularity or multiple cells coming together to form one organism, etc. Against this backdrop, we find all insects share a relationship with each other - they have a certain body plan, cellular functions, genetically encoded features (many have six legs, for instance) and the information of how these features are formed encoded in their genome. Butterflies share many evolutionary features with insects. Butterflies are also specialised moths, the two separating from their sister group of insects 150 to 200 million years ago. Thereafter, moths themselves evolved significantly before butterflies emerged as a separate group about 85 million years ago, around when dinosaurs went extinct. All the characteristics butterflies have-including much more acute vision compared to moths who rely more on smell - grew thereon. Visual cues are extremely important for butterflies which explains why many are so attractive. Their appealing colours evolved to help them either evade predators or attract mates, dark colours developing to help butterflies maintain body temperature, being cold-blooded.

Some species developed fascinating traits. Aposematism is a combination of two features - one is a defence against predators, like a chemical cover, some butterflies being toxic to birds, spiders, etc. These caterpillars feed on toxic plants which are difficult, if not deadly, for predators to digest. Being protected thus is an internal property - but butterflies with toxins then developed bright wing patterns to show predators they are dangerous, signalling the risk they bear.

Some species developed fascinating traits. Aposematism is a combination of two features - one is a defence against predators, like a chemical cover, some butterflies being toxic to birds, spiders, etc. These caterpillars feed on toxic plants which are difficult, if not deadly, for predators to digest. Being protected thus is an internal property - but butterflies with toxins then developed bright wing patterns to show predators they are dangerous, signalling the risk they bear.

SubQuestion No : 50Q.50

Aposematism is a combination of

- A. Defence against predators by emitting a bad Smell.
- B. Bright wing patterns for camouflage.
- C. Defence against predators by butterflies with toxins.
- D. Bright wing patterns to show predators they are dangerous.

Q.129

Given below are two statements: one is labelled as Assertion A and the other is labelled as Reason R

Assertion A: It is plausible to think that autonomy involves a kind of skill that individuals must develop, exercise and maintain. This ongoing process of planning and managing is not automatic but requires efforts and resources that are secured by social and material conditions provided by the state.

Reason R: However, the commitment to individual autonomy cannot force the liberal state to provide the social and material conditions by which citizens could come to be autonomous. It must depend on the individuals to strive independently for achieving their autonomy.

In the light of the above statements, choose the most appropriate answer from the options given below.

Read the following passage and answer the questions

What are the seed beds of civic virtue? There are a variety of aspects of liberal society that can be seen as inculcating civic virtues, including the market, civic associations, and the family. Let me briefly look at each of these theorists of the 'New Right' often praise the market as a school of civic virtue. Many Thatcher/Reagan reforms of the 1980s aimed to extend the scope of markets in people's lives through free trade, deregulation, tax cuts, the weakening of trade unions, and reducing welfare benefits in part in order to teach people the virtues of initiative and self-reliance. Much of the recent right wing attack on the welfare state has been formulated precisely in terms of citizenship. The welfare state was said to promote passivity amongst the poor, creating a culture of dependency reducing citizens to passive dependants under bureaucratic tutelage. The market, by contrast, encourages people to be self-supporting. The new right believes that being self-supporting is not only an important civic virtue in itself, but also a precondition for being accepted as a full member of society. By failing to meet the obligation to support themselves, the long-term unemployed are a source of shame for society as well as themselves.

The group of twenty or G20 has of late emerged as a very premier forum for international cooperation. The significance of it arises from the fact that its members are the world's advanced and emerging economies. These G20 members altogether represents about 85% of the global GDP, 80% of global trade and two-thirds of the world's population. The G20 originated to overcome the financial crisis that occurred in 1990s in the emerging economies of Asia. This organization is broadly representative and inclusive as the G20 chair has been made rotational annually and a member from different regional grouping of countries is elected to the presidency. Since its beginning, India has actively participated in the G20 process. India is a major stakeholder and also interested in the stability of the world economy. Due to India's support during the Seoul summit development was included as an agenda item and the Seoul Development consensus also emerged. India's interest in G20 has imparted dimension and credibility to G20 deliberation. India's successful organization of G20 summit in New Delhi recently has again ignited hopes for the establishment of a framework for strong, sustainable and balanced growth and an alternative world order.
